Mina is thirty years old and leads a life in London built with great care but little spontaneity. One evening she receives a phone call from her mother. Her father is dead. After returning home for the funeral, Mina ends up staying. Home is a small seaside town, where her Moroccan father ran a beach bar frequented mostly by migrants; a place of refuge for those who felt unwelcome in this new land.

A luminous debut about the search for belonging, the tension between departure

Laura Miller and Edmund Putnam have long shared pints, gossip, and reflections by the Thames. But when Putnam loses his father and his beloved magazine to an unbearable new editor, he begins to withdraw. Laura, juggling her own troubles and a fragile life in the city, must find a way to reach him. The Palm House is a sharp, tender novel of friendship, loss, and the small mercies that keep us going.

From the Women's Prize-shortlisted author of 'First Love'.

This latest anthology from Jane McMorland Hunter covers all aspects of the weather: from storms to heatwaves to April showers, there's a poem to reflect all the elements throughout the year. You can slip into a poem to dream of better weather (whether to you that means snow, rain or sun) or revel in a mirroring of what is currently going on outside of your window. Features a selection of poems stretching across the globe and centuries.

An anthology of classic and contemporary poems, all about the weather.
